Isn't the coin overpriced right now?

I know what you guys might be thinking. How can I say this coin overpriced ($0.3) with just $30million market cap right? It's because of the circulation. Right now only around 100 million coins in circulation. Let's assume in 5-6 years the market cap of library credit goes to around $500million with full circulation (which is around 500million). Although market cap goes from $34m to $500m, per coin price will be only $1! Which means only 3X ROI. Anyone else thought about this? That's why I think even at 30 cents this coin is overvalued.

{I'm not here to create FUD, I'm just not clear about how the coin circulation works for library}

Question: Anyone got any idea about how long will it take to reach full coin circulation of 500million?

↓ On October 9, 2006, it was announced that Youtube would be purchased by Google for US$1.65 billion in stock, which was completed on November 13.

↓ This is from 2014, youtube is an unprofitable goldmine for google. while it loses revenue still, pretty sure that valuation for equity is nice

In other words, lbry could be the next means of user generated media distribution with a profitable model

↓ I guess if you think that a price of $1 in 5-6 years is the top, then yes, one would think LBRY is overvalued right now. LBRY was over a dollar earlier this year, so I could see that going even higher if there is another alt cycle/ more mainstream adoption of crypto / YouTube fall out (not trying to create hype either).

LBRY is still in its infancy in terms of a platform and content - personally, I think there is lots of room for improvement and growth, which would lead to higher utilization of LBRY credits and hopefully a higher value due to the network effect. Whether or not this demand outpaces the supply, only time will tell.

Thanks for your comments/concerns!

↓ What you think the market cap will be in 3 years? Right now it's 33 million

↓ I hate speculating, so I won't answer that (and probably shouldn't because I'm a LBRY employee :p)

↓ Let's make a good assumption, let's say $500 million? In that case, if coin circulation is full (which is 500 million coin), each library coin will be $1. Which is 3 times from the current price. Honestly in Crypto, 3x in 3 years don't look too high. What's your opinion on this?

numbers to see what it would be 3 years from now. The calculation is a bit tricky because of the way the LBRY blockchain reward works - it's logarithmically decreasing over the next 20 years.

↓ You have to think in terms of adoption. If it's weak then yeah, it will go even lower. But if people start making more use of decentralization, free speech etc. then LBRY is a viable option in my opinion. Youtubers may decide to switch over to LBRY when they hear about it and see the profits which can be (and I think are) greater than on Youtube.

↓ To be fair there are a lot of other decentralized platforms that are making headlines and getting adopted far quicker than Library at the moment.

Realistically they're in a very competitive market right now, and I personally believe that Library Credits is a silly name for a company or platform. They picked a word that literally makes people think of books.

↓ Wasn't a fair chunk of that a pre-mine anyway that is privately held (like 200M LBC)? So it's not necessarily true that all will enter circulation in that timeframe.

It's a legit question though.. shouldn't be downvoted

↓ LBRY is only 1 year old. Mining the total of 600million LBC will be over a course of 20 years. The 400million premine doesn't have a schedule, but I think it is likely that over the course of say 3 years, it may be likely that LBC will reach AT LEAST the Market capitalization similar to STEEM (another media crypto) with 300mill market cap. Which is about 10x of todays market cap. If the supply has doubled or tripled to 200-300million coins, we may see 1$ - 1,5$.

But I don't think the demand will be that low when LBRY is used every day by hundreds of thousands of users.
